so wonderful debut novel is also the last we will read from this so talented author that was John Lewis, who sadly died in 2010. John Lewis was a multiple award-winning former journalist who lived and worked in Asia for over thirty years, including several trips to North Korea. Lewis was CNN's first correspondent in the region and was instrumental in the network's Asia expansion. During that time he covered stories that spotlighted the heights of human endeavors, the depths of man's cruelty and everything Mother Nature could conjure up. He was one of only two reporters to accompany Koreans who had been politically stranded in Japan since World War II on a trip to their homeland and long-lost families. He also reported on the long road to the downfall of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, the Tian-an-men Square massacre, the death of Japan's Emperor Hirohito, the assassinations of Indira and Rajiv Gandhi, Hong Kong's return to China, presidential elections in Taiwan, deadly air disasters, volcanic eruptions, typhoons, earthquakes, the rise of fundamentalism, civil strife, U.S. presidential trips to the region, the visit of a Pope, Olympic Games and a scissors-wielding dancing beautician. Lewis is a graduate of Tokyo's Sophia University (Jochi Daigaku) and holds a Ph.D. He previously worked for two years at the East-West Center, a think tank in Honolulu. He lived with his wife Reiko, an interior designer, and their two cats in Honolulu/Oahu in the Hawai'ian Islands...I am so happy that Jake Needham, author of Bangkok and Singapore novels himself, and Christopher G. Moore, THE leading master of the Southeast Asian Crime Culture Literature have the same opinion of the author as my little self..."He's a guy who's been there. He knew how that stuff looks, how it feels, and how it smells. Let him show You around his territory. It will be a hell of a trip." Jake Needham, creator of Jack Shepherd"John Lewis knows Asia inside out and is well equipped to guide the reader through the mysterious ways of the East." Christopher G. Moore, creator of Vincent "Vinnie" Calvino and numerous East Asian novels, among those the famous "Smile-Trilogy" This "Yen-Conspiracy" is a real rollercoaster ride between the Oval Office at DC, Tokyo, Bangkok, Seoul, Chiang Mai, Chiang Rai, the Shan State, Shimoda and Pyongyang...An old Japanese industrialist full of ideas to restore the good OLD Japanese Ways, an absolutely amoral First Lady aka FLOTUS are using a top Korean assassin nicknamed "The Ghost" wanting to divide among themselves the absolute power over the whole planet! Vietnam war veteran, journalist and American expatriate Jack Lambert is catching up with their scheme and has to act fast together with a very but very very mixed troupe of Old Asia hands. Tokyos highest halls of power are about to be overthrown, Bangkoks red-light districts will never be the same and the poppy fields of the Golden Triangle will be used against the U.S. of A., according to the plans, the old Japanese, the FLOTUS and the Ghost are following. But decades of hatred, heartache, murder, and greed will be discovered by an innocent relative of the revengeful Japanese - who's so stupid to let her have access to his years and years of diaries. So we will learn firsthand the history of the Asian states that are Japan, China, Korea, Thailand, Burma etc. from World War II until now...And the motley crew around Jack Lambert is running out of time! Read this book, I can only recommend to all lovers of Asian intrigues and thrillers - this is really one of the best! And I was hoping for a sequel - until I read on the last page of the passing of John Lewis. I will never forget the author, who was able to describe complicated currency and culture facts so that a simple person like me could really understand them! We miss You, John Lewis!
